N. Y. School Aide To Help Israel Establish School System

Charles J. Bensley, a member of New York City's Board of Education, will go to Israel this winter to advise authorities there on establishing a free, compulsory secondary school system. The forthcoming trip is expected to last about three weeks. It was announced by David Ben-Dov, Israel's education attaché in the United States, at a reception in Mr. Bensley's honor at the Israeli Consulate, 11 East Seventieth Street, in New York.

Mr. Bensley, a 53-year-old business man and lawyer, was invited to Israel by Abba Eban, Minister of Education and Culture, says the New York Times. Free and compulsory kindergarten and elementary education was established by Israel in 1949, shortly after its founding. Secondary school education is provided either by private schools charging tuition or by schools set up by local authorities or civic organizations.

Although almost all children up to 14 years old — the present compulsory school age limit — attend elementary school, only about a third of those between 14 and 18 go to high school. Of those who do receive secondary education, only about a fifth are graduated.

Mr. Ben-Dov said his Government felt that a free, public secondary school system was essential to the further integration of the country's 2,000,000 citizens, most of whom are immigrants from more than 100 countries and speak about seventy different languages.

Mr. Bensley, who has been a member of the city school board since 1948, will take with him special reports on the New York secondary schools prepared under the direction of School Superintendent John J. Theobald. The reports will deal with administration, supervision, curriculum, building, equipment, materials, budgets and other aspects of the secondary school program.

The Bronx board member said he was looking forward to his mission to Israel because "it not only can lead to expanded opportunities for the children of Israel, but also presents an opportunity to the United States, as well as the City of New York, to demonstrate its great interest and concern for children everywhere."

Israel and New York have faced similar educational problems, Mr. Bensley said. "We have a heterogeneous population; so has Israel," he continued. "We have had a language problem; so has Israel. Our education concerns itself with

Reform Jews' New Group To Raise $15 Million For Strength

Leaders of the Reform branch of Judaism announced the establishment of a new philanthropic group known as Builders of American Judaism for the advancement and strengthening of Jewish religious life and institutions, says the New York Herald Tribune. The new organization, it was announced, is a wing of the Development Fund for American Judaism, the capital fund-raising arm of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion.

It was explained by former Senator Herbert H. Lehman, honorary chairman of the Development Fund, and Max L. Koeppel, its general chairman, that the new organization will concern itself exclusively with enrolling members contributing $25,000 or more for the fund's purposes.

Mr. Lehman said that the Builders of Judaism has set a goal of $15,000,000 for its philanthropic purposes, and is starting with a nucleus of thirty men and women contributors whose gifts range from $25,000 to $250,000, for an aggregate of more than $3,000,000.

Mr. Lehman underscored the purposes of the group by presenting charter membership and specially inscribed bronze plaques to three New York philanthropists at a press conference at his home, 820 Park Avenue, New York, for their contributions to the Builders of American Judaism of $250,000 each.

These three are Mr. Koeppel, prominent in the realty investment field and treasurer of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations; David W. Kian, industrialist and director, chairman of the Development Fund, and vice-chairman of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion; and Jack A. Goldfarb, textile manufacturer, national chairman of the Development Fund and a member of the board of trustees of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations. Mr. Lehman received a plaque as a charter member and honorary chairman.

The group has its headquarters in offices of the Development Fund, at 838 Fifth Avenue, and will formally launch its public drive at a date to be announced.

Mr. Lehman and Mr. Koeppel said the organization of the new wing of the Development Fund to solicit contributions of $25,000 or more was prompted by the fact that the "explosive growth of the synagogue movement in this coun-

Israel Replies To Soviet Charge It Plays "Trojan Horse" In Africa With Trade Mask

Israel, accused by Moscow of bringing militarism to African countries and of economic penetration of those countries on behalf of old colonial powers, made some accusations against the Soviet Union. The counter-charges were issued in an Israeli broadcast to Africa in English, French, and Swahili, says the New York Times. The message gave the Israelis a chance to treat one of their favorite subjects, their programs of technical and material assistance to less developed countries.

The Israeli radio said: "Izvestia accuses Israel of forcing militarism onto new African countries through the supply to them of arms, through the sale to them of weapons.

"This comes strangely from a country which these very days is once again massively supplying weapons of destruction to the United Arab Republic, a country which is so far from peace-loving as to boast openly of its intention to destroy Israel.

"And here it would not be out of the way to ask Izvestia if Russia would refuse to supply arms to the African countries if it had the opportunity of doing so. Izvestia accuses Israel of trying to impose a new form of colonialism on Africa. There is more than one kind of colonialism. There is the colonialism that is on the way out. And there is a new, more sinister kind of colonialism which sends occupying armies into its neighbors' territories. To put Israel into this category is simply ludicrous," the broadcast said. It went on to give examples of Israel's "so-called economic penetration."

The broadcast cited the agreement with Ghana by which Israel helped to found the Black Star Shipping Line, with Ghana holding sixty per cent of the shares and Israel forty.

"A few weeks ago," the broadcast continued, "the Ghana Government expressed the wish to buy the remaining forty per cent of the shares. Israel, having completed its task of setting up the company for Ghana, withdrew from ownership in accordance with its established principles."

Aside from joint economic ventures such as this, says the New York Times, Israel now has more than 150 technicians abroad in under-developed countries. They are spread throughout sixteen African countries; seven Asian countries; and five in the Middle East.

"Izvestia accuses Israel of trying to force itself on Africa," the broadcast said. "Certainly Israel has an interest in Africa just as Israel has an interest in every part of the world and in every country.

"Israel quite frankly and openly wants the goodwill of other countries just as it offers its own goodwill to them," the message said. "If a mutual exchange of knowledge and experience adds to this goodwill and widens its area, what is wrong with that?" the Israelis asked.

The Soviet Government's official newspaper, Izvestia, had charged that Israel was "fulfilling the role of a Trojan horse" for the North Atlantic Treaty organization in Africa.

A special editorial on the page devoted to foreign affairs had accused Premier David Ben-Gurion's Government of striving not only to expand its trade relations with a number of African countries but also to penetrate their governments and armies.

The editorial had accused Israel of working behind "the United States imperialists" and the North Atlantic Alliance to set up military training missions in Ghana, Liberia, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, and other African countries. What is more, the editorial said, the Israelis are trying to get rid of obsolete weapons.

The attack against the Israelis and "the Zionist propagandists" was one of the most severe to appear in the Soviet press for some time, although broadcasts beamed by the Moscow radio to the Middle East have been carrying on a running campaign of this type, according to the New York Times. The attack by the Government newspaper, which is edited by Premier Khrushchev's son-in-law, Alekxei I. Adzhubei, appeared to have a special and a double-edged significance.

It was certain to appeal to the Arab nations of the Middle East, particularly the United Arab Republic, whose Vice President, Marshal Abdel Hakim Amer, had left Moscow after a ten-day visit to negotiate on economic and military questions. The editorial apparently was intended as a warning to the African nations that have close relations with Israel that they were being hoodwinked" by "a tool of American capital."

Izvestia said, "Peoples freed from colonialism cannot help but feel extreme distrust of Israel, playing the part of a Trojan horse of the oppressive forces of imperialism."

Israel has been carrying on extensive trade and political relations with a number of African countries from the eastern horn in Ethiopia to the west coast and among several of the newly independent nations. This has always been an extremely sore point among the Arab nations, particularly to the government of President Gamal Abdel Nasser in Cairo. President Nasser also has been trying to play a leading role on the African Continent.

During Marshal Amer's visit to Moscow, this question was believed to have been considered at great length as part of the political discussions. Marshal Amer also is reported to have sought an extension of the agreements the United Arab Republic has with the Soviet Union for the supply of arms and spare parts for President Nasser's army as well as new concessions in the economic field.

The official press agency Tass quoted Soviet foreign aid officials as having said that as a result of Marshal Amer's visit it had been decided to increase the power of the Aswan High Dam by

Leader Of Vienna Jews Accuses Austria Of Bad Faith In Refusal To Return Property

An appeal to the Big Four powers, which restored Austria's independence in 1955, is being planned by survivors of the once-great Jewish business community in Vienna. The Jewish group accuses the Austrian Government and Parliament of refusing to return Jewish assets as was made mandatory in the 1955 state treaty, says the New York Times. The United States, Britain, France, and the Soviet Union, the former occupying powers, were the signatories of the treaty, and its guarantors.

Under Article 26 of the treaty the Austrian Government committed itself to settle the question of Jewish assets within a short time. Much of the property was left heirless when the Nazis killed about 200,000 Austrian Jews. There are said to be only 12,000 to 15,000 survivors in the country now.

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer's Government has paid out to date the equivalent of about $1,000,000,000 to individual Jews, Jewish organizations, and the state of Israel. The Austrian Government and political parties have not emulated Dr. Adenauer's example.

According to prevailing official doctrine, Austria was the "first victim of Nazism" and had no dealings with Hitler that were not imposed by force.

This official doctrine, which is cultivated on every occasion in Austria, has gained little or no acceptance abroad, where libraries and government archives are filled with evidence to the contrary. It is generally regarded as a matter of historical and public record that Austria played a substantial role in Hitler's Third Reich.

A. M. Ehrlich, the 64-year-old president of the Jewish Business Men's Association of Vienna, said at a news conference that the appeal to the great powers would be lodged if the Austrian Government refused to take action on a bill that has been gathering dust for some time.

Speaking with strong emotion, Herr Ehrlich said the Jewish claims had been frustrated at every turn by delaying tactics and Government red tape, reports the New York Times. He said the Jews were not asking the Government and Parliament to appropriate any tax money to satisfy their claims.

These claims, he said, could be met from the proceeds of the ownerless Jewish property that has been piling up in two Government depots. According to Herr Ehrlich, there is more than $4,000,000 in cash available, with additional amounts pouring in daily.

The head of the Jewish association said there were more than 500 pieces of unclaimed Jewish real estate still to be liquidated.

He asserted that every time he and his associates approached Government and Parliamentary leaders, they were given the "run-around" with explanations that the agenda of pending legislation was so big it would be impossible to obtain consideration for a bill. Herr Ehrlich said he was told recently that with the Christmas holidays then in the offing there was no hope for early action.

Milk is an essential food for everyone, from infancy to old age. Up to twelve years, children need one pint daily; adolescents, one and a half pints; adults, at least half a pint. Milk can be taken as whole or skimmed liquid, powdered, or evaporated.

Canada once had frequent epidemics of serious diseases but many of these have become almost obsolete due to the advances in medical science. Typhoid fever has been greatly reduced since purification of water supplies and pasteurization of milk have been the subjects of intensive campaigns.

Canadian Jewry To Honour Samuel Bronfman At 70; To Name New Congress Building For Him

Canadian Jewish Congress will render tribute to Samuel Bronfman, national president, on behalf of the Canadian Jewish community, on his seventieth birthday, in recognition of his outstanding career of service over the past forty years, the latter half of which was devoted in great part to his interest in the local, national, and international work of the Congress. A national celebration will take place at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, in Montreal, on March 5. The Congress national executive committee meeting in Toronto, on December 18, authorized plans for the erection of a national Congress headquarters, to be located in central Montreal, and to serve also at a National Cultural Institute comprising Archives, museum, and Congress library, to be named for Mr. Bronfman.

"The dedication of the building as 'The Samuel Bronfman House' will bear permanent testimony to Mr. Bronfman's unique position in the Canadian Jewish community," a statement issued by the national executive committee announced, "and would serve as a fitting tribute to mark his seventieth birthday, thus giving expression to the admiration and appreciation that we all feel for his vigorous and devoted leadership over these many, many years."

Mr. Bronfman, whose philanthropic activities are as well known abroad as in Canada, was first elected to the presidency of the Congress in 1938 when a delegation of leading citizens requested him to accept leadership on the emerging problems of those dark years which finally culminated in World War II. Under his guidance and generous support, the Canadian Jewish Congress has grown to a position of respected achievement both in Canada and internationally. Since his election to office, Mr. Bronfman's interest in Congress affairs has been notable for its unswerving dedication and wisdom. The enormous growth of the Canadian Jewish Community in recent years has been accompanied by expanding Congress activities and services which have profited much from Mr. Bronfman's direction.

The committee in charge of the project nationally to establish the Samuel Bronfman House will comprise the vice-presidents of Congress: Lavy M. Becker, of Montreal; J. Irving Oelbaum, of Toronto; Sol Kanee, of Winnipeg; and Esmond E. Lando, of Vancouver; and the chairman of the national executive committee, Monroe Abbey, Q.C., together with the national executive vice-president of Congress, Saul Hayes, both of Montreal. The composition of regional committees, which have been selected from leaders of Jewish communities of major cities across Canada, will be announced soon.

LEADER OF VIENNA

"I am 84 years old," he exclaimed. "I am alone in this world. Twenty-one members of my family were killed. Nobody is going to intimidate me and prevent me from carrying out my duty in this matter. Only death will still my voice.

"The Austrian Government is not going to flimflam us any longer. We are going to appeal to the great powers. We are going to carry our case to the attention of the world.

"We don't want any tax money. We want what is ours by right. It's there and awaiting distribution. They are waiting for us to die off."

The 1961 budget estimates show two items that concern the Juedische Kultusgemeinde of Vienna — the organized welfare community of Jews. One is for 80,000,000 schillings (about $1,150,000) in payment for the synagogues and cultural centers that were destroyed, says the New York Times. The suggested amount is only a small fraction of the original investments.

The second item is a yearly contribution of about $100,000 to the community's operating costs. Neither of these items is related to the problem of property restitution.

try finds its national institutions in woeful need of proper facilities, adequate manpower, and sufficient funds."

They added that national Jewish religious institutions "have not been supported with anything near the degree of generosity accorded medical, educational, welfare, health, and refugee causes."

Improvements expected to be financed through the Builders drive, says the New York Herald Tribune, will include regional Houses of Living Judaism in Chicago, Los Angeles, and Miami; purchase of land and creation of six additional summer youth camps, and construction of a modern academic building for classrooms and administrative offices at the HUC-JIR's California school in Los Angeles, of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion.

ISRAEL REPLIES TO SOVIET CHARGE

adding two turbines to the planned twelve in the $1,000,000,000 project to make it the biggest electric power plant in Africa and one of the largest in the world, says the New York Times. Marshal Amer also was said to have asked that the Soviet Union increase its contribution of irrigation equipment for the Aswan Dam waters from twenty-five per cent of the total needed to forty per cent.

In another area of Soviet political activity in the Middle East, Tass announced that Nuritdin A. Mukhitdinov, member of the ruling Communist party Presidium who specializes in African and Asian affairs, had a warm meeting with Fuad Nassar, the exiled leader of the Communist party of Jordan.

Whether it is called lunch or dinner, it should be a good full meal. If a proper breakfast has not been eaten, the need for food at midday can become serious. Breakfast and the noonday meal should each supply one third of the day's nourishment.

86th Annual Meeting, National Canadian Bank Reports Higher Earnings Per Share

The 86th annual general meeting of National Canadian Bank was held, in Montreal, on Tuesday, January 10. The president of the Bank, Ulric Roberge, paid a tribute to his predecessor, Charles St-Pierre, who retired after fifty-eight years, in the service of this institution; and as general manage for fourteen years; and president for over ten years.

Mr. Roberge remarked that, on the average of the past five years, business on the whole has been as active in 1960, as in several recent years, particularly in some important sectors, such as mining, forestry and the building industry.

The substantial volume of our foreign trade should not make us lose sight of the disadvantages which are shown in some respects, remarked Mr. Roberge. He then pointed out that the proportion of fully-manufactured goods listed in our imports, far from decreasing as had been hoped, is on the increase. The proportion of raw materials is still around 35 per cent of our total exports.

Mr. Louis Hébert, general manager, read the Board of Directors' report for the financial year ended November 30, 1960. Profits amount to $6,919,910, a gain of $1,427,200 over the previous year. Net profits total $3,069,164, compared with $2,635,714. Earnings per share were $3.07, against $3.02 in 1959.

Payments to shareholders amounted to $1,998,192, instead of $1,656,443 the previous year. A sum of $1,000,000 was transferred to rest account which now stands at $33,000,000. Total deposits, up $30,365,511 over a year ago, amount to $727,307,564. The Bank's port-folio of securities, showing an increase of $83,887,723, aggregate $256,104,733.

The following shareholders were elected members of the board of directors: Pierre Beauchemin, Wilfred Rherer, Q.C., Hon. F. Philippe Brais, Q.C., Maurice Chartré, C.A., Aristide. Cousineau, George A. Daly, Roger DeSèrres, Auguste Desilets, Q.C., Hon. J. M. Dessureault, Georgea T. Donohue, Hon. Wilfrid Gagnon, A. J. Major, Henri Ouimet, J. Alexandre Prud'homme, Q.C., Hon. Jean Raymond and Ulric Roberge.

THE ISRAELIS AND ZIONISM

would have to draw one of two conclusions: either that they belong to some special class of Jews, who are foolish enough to want to stay in Israel or unfortunate enough to have no alternative; or else there is no reason why those who can find the opportunity should not take advantage of Professor Handlin's offer and enjoy both the moral credit and the fleshpots.

It is true that Ben-Gurion's view of the future (or, rather, lack of future) of the Zionist Organization is not shared by the majority of even his own party. But that is rather a matter of terminology and organizational convenience. The question at issue between Ben-Gurion and, say, Sharett, is simply whether it would be better to maintain and foster the present Zionist Organization, although the vast majority of its members have no intention at present of settling in Israel, or to regard organized Zionism as bankrupt and to build up a new form of association between Israel and the Jewish people.

Ben-Gurion says: The so-called Zionist Organization is no longer Zionist; let us drop the pretence and establish the closest possible direct contact with all Jews, irrespective of their ideology. The Mapai majority says: Yes, there are only a small minority of true Zionists, it is true. But, in the first place, if we relentlessly insist on the point we shall antagonize devoted workers for Israel without thereby increasing the number of potential immigrants, and besides, it would be better to broaden the scope of the Organization by bringing in communal and other bodies, thus making it representative of the great bulk of Jewry, than to scrap it all and start again from scratch. (This, I believe, is close to the attitude of Dr. Nahum Goldmann.)

There are many arguments on both sides, but they do not affect the basic belief, which is characteristic of what I might call "Israeli Zionism," that there can be no true Zionism without at least the sincere aspiration and the constant effort to settle in Israel.

It is strange, by the way, that Ben-Gurion's attitude should be so frequently misunderstood, though he has expounded it in print with great clarity and at considerable length. Krivine writes, for instance, "Ben-Gurion, for a rarity, is wrong this time. The Western Jews in the mass are no longer Zionists or potential Zionists in his sense of the term." Apart from a reservation with regard to the question of "potential Zionists" in the long run, this is exactly what Ben-Gurion says, and his conclusion is: Well, then, let us stop calling them Zionists.

Ben-Gurion ends the essay I have referred to on a note of hope: "Hebrew education, the vision of Messianic redemption for the Jewish people and for humanity, and an ever-strengthening attachment to Israel — this is the threefold thread that can unite and bind together all trends in Jewry in all the countries of the dispersion, and if those who are loyal to our people in Israel and the Diaspora so will it — the thread shall never be broken."

The question which Israel poses to every Zionist is this: these principles and aspirations can become the common heritage of all Jews; are you prepared to offer something more: the readiness to make your home in Israel if you can, and — if you are unable to make the break yourself by reason of age, economic difficulties and so forth — to encourage and assist your children to do so?

The Israelis and Zionism

BY MOSHE BAR-NATAN, ISRAELI CORRESPONDENT OF THE JEWISH FRONTIER, OF NEW YORK

I heard a story the other day about a distinguished visitor to Israel, a man who plays a prominent part in the work of the World Jewish Congress, who was deeply disturbed at what he was told by a five-year-old sabra (native-born). "You're not a Jew," declared the tot. "You don't live in Israel." "There's the attitude of the Israeli for you!" said the visitor.

He might have been told, of course, that he shouldn't take too much notice of the prattle of children. There was another child of my acquaintance, who said one day, "When I grow up, I'll be like Grandma. My hair will go all white, all my teeth will fall out, and I'll talk Yiddish!"

But, even apart from that, it would be as well to beware of generalizations. Not all the sabras are cast in the same mold, and the native-born are far from being the whole of Israel. Two-thirds were born abroad, and these include a bewildering variety of types, from the pre-State veterans to the newcomers from Morocco and Iraq, from the kibbutznik to the capitalist.

Another warning I should like to have given our distinguished tourist was: don't take the Israeli too literally. We have heard ad nauseam of the sabra habit of using the word "Zionist" for any kind of religious or moral preaching. Actually, the term no more implies a considered view of Zionism than the derogatory use of such words as "preaching" itself signifies an antagonism to religion. It is not the Movement that is the target of these light-hearted arrows, but some of its exponents, who repeat its slogans without themselves being prepared to live up to them, and bore the young people because they are boring in themselves.

There are certain signs, too, of a shift in the attitude of the younger generation to their elders. Take, for example, one of the most irreverent spokesmen of the young Israeli, Dahn Ben Amotz, a penetrating and infuriating mocker at established slogans and ways of thought. But there has always been something self-deprecatory in his mockery. In an interview a short time ago, he began a remark by saying, "When I was — if you will excuse the expression — in the Palmach. . . ." That did not mean that he despised the Palmach and its heroic role in the War of Independence; he was expressing his distaste for the people who thought they could indefinitely live on the glories of the past. I have never heard a young fellow scornfully saying "Zionut" when Ben-Gurion was speaking about the Messianic vision or the need to build the Negev.

Some time ago Dahn Ben Amotz helped to edit a program called "Those Were the Days," made up of songs and recollections of the last two generations. When he was asked about his motives for collaborating in this venture, his first reply was a typically cheeky "sabraism": "Well, I've never made any money out of these old-time choruses, and I thought it was time I did." But he went on to say something rather revealing, more or less in these words:

"You know, I've done a lot of laughing at these old people, but you must admit they had something. They made innumerable speeches about draining the Hula, but then they actually went and did it, and there you are — the Hula is drained." The program itself, which was put on in Tel Aviv's largest hall, was a roaring success, and the young people flocked to listen, with enjoyment and a certain amount of respect, to the "Zionut" of their elders.

We should be careful, therefore, not to confuse a natural and healthy contempt for humbug and platitude with an antagonism to Zionism itself. The question arises, however: what kind of Zionism? And here I think we may say that there is something like a central Israeli point of view. It is by no means unanimous — there are deviations on both sides of the center — but there is a typical viewpoint, which is derived from the actual position of people living in the country called Israel.

Before going on to discuss what it is, however, it may help to make things clear if we first survey the untypical views. On the one hand, we have the attitude expressed in its extremist form by the much-publicized "Canaanites." These are the most uncompromising anti-Zionists, the people who deny that there is any bond whatsoever between Israelis and Jews outside. Their philosophy might be expressed in the words of the old drinking song: "We're here because we're here because we're here!" (a lyric which, I believe, owes nothing to Gertrude Stein).

They utterly deny the significance of religion in Jewish life, and indeed everything connoted by the term "Jewishness." For them, the Israeli Arab is more their brother than the Jew who lives in New York, and they aspire to become completely merged in a Middle East federation or commonwealth, an all-embracing Semitic union, in which the Israelis will play a dominant part by virtue of their superior education and energy.

The Canaanite movement as such is almost extinct, but its ideology still exerts some influence through the popular scandal-sheet Haolam Hazeh, as well as through the "New Regime" movement of Eliezer Livneh, Isaiah Leibovitz and Shmuel Tamir, which denounces all fund-collecting abroad as "Schnorr" and demands that Israel should live entirely on its own resources.

At the other extreme we have those who have swallowed entire what may be called the American view of Zionism, as typified by my friend David Krivine's article in the last issue of Israel Seen From Within. Krivine not only accepts, but apparently welcomes, the fact that only a tiny minority of Jews from the Western democracies are coming to settle in Israel. He regards it as the basis of a new synthesis, which has great advantages for the Jewish people as a whole.

I find this attitude somewhat difficult to understand. Let us take a totally utopian assumption, that fifty thousand American Jews per year, a characteristic cross-section of the community, old and young, rich and poor, should one day take it into their heads to come over here to live and play an active, personal part in the building of Israel. There is no need to enlarge on the tremendous effect that would have on the material prospects of the country and the lift it would give to the morale of its people.

I have no doubt that it would have a vitalizing effect on American Jewry itself; it would certainly not in any way weaken its bonds with Israel — quite the contrary. And it would involve no danger whatsoever of the liquidation of the American Diaspora. In fact, the synthesis would be more intimate than before.

Of course this is a visionary assumption in present conditions, and it may be contended that we should face the facts, namely that Western Jewry is not coming and has no intention to come. But for any movement worthy of the name, surely the facing of facts is not a terminus but a starting-point. Great movements face facts in order to change them. There is room for thought and discussion on the best method of transforming the situation, and there is no guarantee whatsoever of success, but a supine submission to the status quo is a sure sign of stagnation.

What is most noteworthy, however, is the contrast between Krivine's theory and his practice. He, too, was born and brought up in a Western country, but apparently he was not content with the blessings of the "New Diaspora," and left to settle in Israel. The number of those who have done likewise is not large, it is true, but there are several thousands of them. They have shown by their actions their belief that there is something better for the Jew than even the freedom and tolerance of American and British democracy.

It is important to bear in mind that by no means all of these Israelis, who were once Americans and Englishmen, are hot-headed, self-sacrificing idealists. Many, of course, are Zionists, who regard settlement in Israel as the logical outcome of their principles. A very large number, however, are quite ordinary people who have seldom or never been near a Zionist meeting, but have come to the conclusion that Israel is the right place for themselves and their children. "Anglo-Saxon" immigrants naturally believe that what they have done others can — and should — do. That is why they are generally staunch supporters of the Ben-Gurion view of Zionism.

You will find more sympathy for the attitude of Western Jewry among people who came from Eastern Europe or the countries of the Middle East. Those who have been impelled to aliya by suffering and persecution find it easier to understand the reluctance of Jews living in comfortable circumstances to abandon their homes and their business. In fact, almost every "Anglo-Saxon" will have found himself at one time or another taking part in this kind of conversation:

"Where do you come from?"

"America."

"Oh, how nice. But what made you come here?"

This, of course, is an anti-Zionist attitude. It regards living in Israel as a misfortune, at best an unavoidable necessity, rather than a privilege. It leads straight to the point of view I heard expressed three years ago at the Ideological Conference in Jerusalem by Professor Oscar Handlin:

"Although I personally feel, as I said earlier, that a whole Jewish life can be led in America, I would be delighted to help any American Jew who felt that he could live a better life as an individual and as a Jew in Israel, and I know that this is the predominant sentiment among American Jews. If there are Jews in Russia who want to come to Israel, we will help them come if we can. If there are Jews in Russia who want to come to America, we will try to get them in there. If there are American Jews who want to come to Israel, we will help them come, and should there be Israelis who want to come to America, we will try to do that, too."

The last point aroused a giggle of uneasy laughter, but I think it is the logical conclusion of all that went before; in fact, it is the logical conclusion of American Zionism. If life in America is so good and satisfying, why should its privileges be withheld from Israeli Jews? And of course, we have our yordim, or emigrants, who decide that life in Israel is too hard and try to make a go of it in America, Canada or elsewhere.

It is natural that yerida should be frowned upon in Israel, but it is rather surprising that it should be regarded with such uneasiness, not to say censoriousness, by Jews abroad. After all, why not? Doesn't it show that some Israelis, at least, have a proper appreciation of Diaspora Jewish values? Why should it be any less virtuous to settle in America than to stay in America?

Fortunately, the vast majority of Israelis prefer to stay in Israel. If ever most of them change their minds, if they reach the conclusion that the Diaspora and Israel are of equal value, that you can be just as good a Zionist in New York as in Tel Aviv, then all the donations and the friendship and the passionately platonic love for Israel will be of no avail. Israel will begin to lose its most active and energetic people, and Zionism will die.

The point was admirably expressed by David Ben-Gurion in his classic essay, "Israel and the Diaspora," in the Government Year Book for 1957. Imagine, he said, that the Zionist Organization contained the entire Jewish people without exception, but not a single Zionist had come to settle in Israel. Obviously, the State would never have been established.

On the other hand, suppose the name "Zionism" had never existed, but masses of Jews had come to settle here, built an independent economy, revived the Hebrew language and culture, and attained sovereign independence. In that case, would not the Jewish State have arisen? Of course, as he says himself, the picture is largely artificial and abstract, but it makes what appears to me an incontrovertible point.

And there should be no mistake about it: this is the central Israeli view of Zionism, for if the people of Israel held any other view, they
